Doing assigned homework is required for success in math courses.

We know that almost every student struggles with math homework from time to time, and a parent or tutor is not always available to help.

Hotmath.com is an Internet service that explains homework problems from textbooks, so students can immediately see how to get the answers.

If you are looking for help for your child, you may wish to consider a subscription to Hotmath.com as one of your options. Their fee for unlimited personal access to the website is $49 per year, much less than a personal tutor and available 24 hours a day.

This website can be a great help for those who have math anxiety or for advanced students who would like support moving ahead. If you decide to use the service, please let us know which aspects of this resource you and your child found most helpful.
